The LDR Celebrates Its 25th Anniversary

Miss Anna Njaa, beloved executive secretary

When one pauses to reflect on twenty-five years of the history of an organization, it is more than ever a time to look forward. One sows and another reaps, but the Lord of the harvest giveth the increase. With thanksgiving and praise to Him for the privilege of being used by Him, we who have been with the LDR from the first, pray, "for Thine is the Kingdom and the Power and the Glory." May this organization continue to exceed human expectations and may the work and the workers continue to glorify God.

The first official convention of the Lutheran Daughters of the Reformation was held on October 13, 1928, just twenty-five years ago. True, there had been missionary societies for girls long before, as young women met together to study missions and work for the Church. The first such group on record in the ELC was a group organized in 1885 at Decorah, Iowa. A group meeting at St. Olaf College was the first to affiliate as an auxiliary of the Women's Missionary Federation. It was adopted by the WMF in 1923. In the years following, much work was done to obtain information on the mission societies spread throughout the Church and to tie them together into one organization.

As a result, on October 13, 1928, a group of about 150 young women met at University Lutheran Church of Hope in Minneapolis to organize what is now the Lutheran Daughters of the Reformation.

The first officers were: Constance Weswig, president; Anna Jordahl, vice-president; Eldri Dieson, recording secretary; Anna May Vold, corresponding secretary; and Jane Thorpe, treasurer.

It is not strange, in the light of the emphasis which the LDR still carries, that the principal concern, even at its beginnings, should be missions. An appeal had come from Sister Anna Huseth that a permanent mission station be established at Shishmaref, Alaska, and at this convention the project was launched. Even today one cannot hear the name "Shishmaref" without connecting it immediately with the LDR. To this field have gone the Rev. Elmer H. Dahle, who served there from 1930-1948 except for a three-year period when the Rev. Edson Hartje was the missionary. Pastor Hartje served again from 1948-1951, and since that time Miss Helen Frost has been the resident missionary.

But the mission outreach became longer and wider. In 1936 there were a number of major changes in projects. Before this time Shishmaref was the only specific mission project, but now the following were added: To supply the salary of a missionary under the Zion Society for Israel; to make contributions to Teller and Igloo, Alaska, and to the Bethany Indian Mission; and to work for the Child Placement Service of the Church. When it was seen that a number of these projects were adequately taken care of by other groups, they were dropped, leaving only the Zion Society and Shishmaref as specific projects. Since 1936 new goals have been set each year.

Lutheran Welfare, three foreign mission schools, South America, and a fund for restoring mission property in China were added to Shishmaref and Jewish missions. From time to time projects have been dropped and others added as the need is seen. Also included now are the mission to the American Negro and a missionary residence for returned women missionaries and women missionaries on furlough.

Convention offering objectives have also carried the LDR outreach into new fields. In 1946 the LDR brought an offering of over six thousand dollars for a mobile hospital unit for China. In 1947 district convention offerings brought $3,000 for a book store at Ft. Dauphin, Madagascar, and $1,000 for literature in South America. For 1948 the objective was $10,000 for a dormitory at the Bible School in Duitama, Colombia, South America. Since that time an airplane has been provided for the Alaska field, with the Rev. Norval G. Hegland carrying the Gospel into the Frozen North. Later $10,000 was given for a chapel in Japan; and to date, nearly $20,000 has been given toward the missionary residence project.

In personnel, too, foreign fields and home missions have felt the impact of LDR-sponsored workers. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Johnson and Rebecca Millunchick are now working among the Jewish people, a project which has been carried on faithfully since 1936. Miss Helen Frost still labors among the Eskimos in Alaska. Under the Missionary-for-a-Day plan, five missionaries are being supported by the LDR: The Rev. and Mrs. Olav Torvik and Eleanor Johnson in Madagascar; Lois Pederson in Japan; and Myrtle Noss in the Sudan (replacing Dorothea Ofstedal, who returned from the Japan field).

In a letter to the LDR, Dr. Rolf Syrdal, executive secretary of Foreign Missions, ELC, has paid tribute to the missionary zeal of the LDR in these words:

"We have been looking over the accomplishments of the LDR in its program for Foreign Missions and are impressed. Your projects have shown vision, awareness of needs, and zeal in meeting your objectives. From your organization a steady stream of prayer-filled activity has helped materially in building God's Kingdom abroad. We have written brief notes of thanks before, but thanks for individual gifts often seem perfunctory or repetitious. I would, therefore, like to express the appreciation of our missionaries and the Board of Foreign Missions for what you have done and for what you are planning for the immediate future as we face the fuller program in its many aspects. . . ."

Under the LDR Treasure Chest plan, whereby LDR girls give special thank offerings, contributions are given to the Deaconess Training School, to a scholarship fund for graduate work in nursing education, to a scholarship fund for social work, to the Book Mission, Sunday School at Home, Church Extension Loan Fund, and the pension fund of the Church.

One could go on and on, with statistics that leave a person a trifle breathless. From a modest beginning twenty-five years ago the LDR has become an organization of 20,722 members in 678 LDR's, plus 7,112 children who belong to the 293 LCR (Lutheran Children of the Reformation) groups. They pioneered in establishing free will offerings at a time when money was being raised through dues, lunches, dinners, bazaars, and the like. They have been zealous in establishing Bible study programs in the Church. Retreats for officers were inaugurated through the LDR. At all times they have followed the admonition given them in the early days of their existence by Sister Anna Huseth: "Always go with the Lord, but never go ahead of Him."

But LDR members, its officers, and its executive secretary, Miss Arna Njaa, are the first to be impatient with too much dwelling on things past. They feel rather that it is a time to re-examine themselves as to how true they have been to their purposes and to press on as the Lord leads them.

Just what is the LDR? What are the guiding principles? It has been put clearly and concisely in one of their little pamphlets:

"The LDR is a missionary organization for the girls and young women of the Church. One branch of the LDR is the LCR (Lutheran Children of the Reformation) which includes boys and girls below confirmation age; another group is the Junior LDR for high school girls; the third group is the Senior LDR of business and professional girls.

"The LDR has a definite Christian purpose. It is not a social club, although sociable fellowship is surely one of the assets of the organization. The constitution states the four-fold purpose this way:

"1. To lead the young women to know Jesus Christ as their Savior.

"2. To be a means through which their religious life may find expression.

"3. To acquaint them with and train them for Christian service in the Church.

"4. To unite the societies of the younger women into co-operative efforts for work in the Church."

The Church might well rise up in thankfulness to God for what He is accomplishing through this organization of young women. May they continue faithful to the high goals which they consistently set for themselves.

Laymen's Sunday

October 18 has been designated as "Laymen's Sunday" through American Protestantism. The Brotherhood of The Evangelical Lutheran Church has adopted this Sunday as its special day. We are not here concerned about the plans for its observance; material concerning that has gone out to pastors and Brotherhoods, and it is probable that many a congregation will take cognizance of the special features of the day.

The Brotherhood is the auxiliary of the Church which probably labors under the greatest handicaps. It is made up of the men of the Church, and they are the breadwinners of their homes. It is not easy for them to find the time for active Brotherhood work. Furthermore, they are the leaders of their congregations, serving on the major boards, carrying much of the burden of day-to-day congregational life.

In spite of this, the Brotherhood goes on with its blessed work. To it we look for leadership in boys' work. It has the responsibility for the Placement Service of the Church. It carries on an aggressive program of parish evangelism. It is fitting that a Sunday be set aside to remind ourselves of these facts and to encourage the men in their work as an auxiliary of the Church.

Present day view of the Aanas farm

Century Farm

Glen Williamson

Peter Aanas was dead. On a bitter afternoon in February, 1953, his funeral procession slowly wound its way past the old homestead to the stately stone church. Peter had been the last resident of the century-old farm to bear the family name.

After the churchyard committal, we visited the old homestead which quietly sits in a nest of hardy oaks and elms about three miles south of the village of Ossian in Winneshiek County, Iowa. We asked questions and were told a fascinating story of toil and faith and love which warmed our hearts. We must share that story with you today.

For some unaccountable reason the great glacier in its southward migration bypassed Iowa's northeast corner, leaving it rugged with wooded hills and hollows. Beautiful to be sure, but even a prophet would hardly have dared suggest that the restless farmer in his quest for cheaper lands would ever penetrate its wilderness.

But more than a hundred years ago a restless farmer did. It was in 1848—just ten years after the mighty Blackhawk had been laid to face the rising sun and two years after Iowa was admitted to the union; one year before the great gold rush. The man who dared defy this rugged forest with its wolves and bears and "diamond backs" was a hardy young Norwegian named Leif Torgrimson Aanas.

It was in July that Leif with his good wife Helga and their three small children came from Telemarken, Norway, and settled first at Scandinavia, Wisconsin. Their first winter in America was a hard one. Their youngest child died, but Ole and Aaste, ages five and three, along with their parents survived its storms. Finally the long awaited spring began to melt the crusty banks of snow, and the pioneering Aanas, with his family, moved westward to Winneshiek County, Iowa.

I am guessing that here they stopped to feast their eyes on the beautiful fertile valley below, and Leif, turning to the faithful Helga, said, "These rolling grasslands and wooded slopes are like the best we knew in Norway. We will settle here." Settle there they did, and today, after more than a century, their granddaughter, Henrietta Hauge (now growing old), still resides at the old address.

The first summer was probably the busiest one this pioneering family ever knew. Without tools they sowed and reaped what little they could and built their first log house. Wild game was plentiful, the summer was warm, and the Aanases were young and strong. They worked and dreamed of a glorious future when other Norwegian families would be moving in and someday, perhaps, a church and a school would grace the new community. This summer was the happiest they had ever known as they worked and planned for better days ahead.

But summer with its solar heating plant gave way to autumn, and the first snow soon ushered in the long, hard winter of '49 and '50. In September Helga presented her little family with a baby girl, the first white child to be born in Winneshiek County.

There was sickness and suffering in the little log house that winter. No doctor could reach them as they sat by the beds of their little ones, watching them toss in their sleep, burning with fever. But old-fashioned remedies supplemented by a simple faith in God finally saw them through the climactic hour and brought them safely back. Then the mother contracted the dreaded malady. For days she hovered near the threshold of eternity while Leif cared for the family and silently waited. He stayed at her side during long periods of delirium; periods which were interspersed with conscious moments bringing to her weary mind the awful realization of their plight.

Then early one January morning, the wind howling at every corner of the little log house and snow piling in great banks down through the valley, she suddenly ceased her incoherent mumbling and rested quietly on her pillow. Leif, still clinging stubbornly with one last fingerhold of faith, feared the end was near. But someone has said, "The lowest ebb is the turn of the tide." Helga got well.

Within a few weeks life at the little homestead had returned to normal, but not for long. One crisis followed another in the life of the pioneer. Game was still plentiful, but meat alone is not conducive to health or happiness, and flour was needed in the Aanas household. It finally became a must. The nearest store was in McGregor, a little town nestled at the foot of towering hills and bluffs on the bank of the Mississippi forty miles away. So Leif buckled on his leggings, pulled down his coon-skin cap, and bade his family goodbye.

For days he trudged the lonely trail over slippery hills through dangerous woods until it seemed he would never reach his destination. In the evening the howling of the timber wolf was enough to keep the lonely traveler on his way. Sometimes he would catch a few hours rest in the middle of the day, then journey far into the night. There were times when, in utter exhaustion, he would wrap his blanket around himself and recline at the base of a great tree beside his camp fire and sleep until, in the bitter cold hours preceding dawn, he would awaken and travel on.

Then one winter afternoon he stood in melting snow atop a lofty hill overlooking the Mississippi. McGregor, with its stores and people, real living people, lay quietly below on the bank of the great river. Leif had reached his destination. Here was rest and food and company. News from down the river started new rumors every time a steamer chugged into dock, and here he heard of pending trouble in the South. A new serial called Uncle Tom's Cabin was running currently in The National Era, and northern reformers were crying loudly against the medieval practice of slavery. Leif listened, but all this seemed distant and unreal to him. His interests were centered in a little log cabin of his own; a cabin surrounded by a potential community; a cabin with a future that didn't worry about the past.

The "Stone Church," located about a mile from the Aanas farm, still stands as a symbol of God's protecting hand over His pioneering people.

When he was fully rested, he shouldered a hundred pounds of flour and started back. The weather was breaking, and spurred on by thoughts of home and loved ones, he traveled long and rested little until he reached the farm. Helga and the children saw him coming and ran down the old Indian trail to meet him. Happiness filled their hearts to overflowing as they cuddled in his embrace.

Resting his aching body he soon forgot the hazards of his journey as he sat down to the hewn log table to reap his rich reward from the hands of the adoring Helga. Steaming hot potato dumplings expertly built around chunks of salted meat, mush, bread, and biscuits were added to the family fare as the welcome spring of 1850 smiled down upon the little homestead.

In Iowa a day in early spring is rarer than a day in June. It inspires the farmer as well as the poet, and there is something romantic even about a plow. From her travel-worn Norwegian Bible Helga read to her children. "No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back is fit for the Kingdom of God." But

This log building is still in use on the Aanas farm

Ole Aanas, first-born of Leif and Helga Aanas

Leif was a farmer without a plow, which is worse than a plumber without a wrench. Something had to be done, so he did it. He sacrificed forty acres of timber land (now worth thousands of dollars) for the needed implement and began to roll the native sod. Thus it was in 1850 that agriculture got under way in northeast Iowa.

But harder times were yet to come. Once, in dire need of money, Leif left his family and went east in search of work. In Chicago he found the needed employment, but while he was there he contracted the cholera and nearly died. He never completely recovered from the effects of this disease which, eventually, may have helped to bring about his early death. Finally, having regained most of his strength, he returned to his family to find that his fondest dreams were coming true.

Other Norwegian immigrants were moving into the county, and soon a community was established. It was in 1853 (just a century ago) that a Lutheran Society was organized, and later the stately stone church was erected about a mile from the Aanas farm. It stands today, four miles south of the present site of Ossian, a credit indeed to architect, community, and God.

The following years were progressive ones for the new community. Leif and Helga labored faithfully with their neighbors to improve their farms and rear their families. The hardest of the hard years was past, but the battle had left its scars, and the awful strain of pioneering began to take its toll. Deep lines now creased the face of the undaunted Norseman, and his broad shoulders began to stoop.

Then came the spring of 1863, and Leif, failing fast, took to his bed. While President Lincoln was pacing the halls of the White House, praying for victory he hardly dared believe would come, the faithful Helga paced the floors of her little log house and prayed that God might touch the fevered brow of her ailing husband. While she watched, bravely fighting back the tears, she saw his face take on the ashen hue of death and knew that he was gone. Her beloved Leif was resting again at the end of another long, hard journey; this time a journey which ended prematurely, for he was only fifty-one.

Returning from the funeral to the lonely cabin, the heartbroken mother found herself confronted with the problems of the future; problems which she, brave woman that she was, would never be called upon to face.

She was never the same again. She and Leif had fought too many battles together for her ever to fight alone. Together they had crossed the ocean to a new world; together they had crossed the Mississippi into virgin territory; together they had crossed the years. God willed that together they would cross the bar.

She tarried briefly . . . then went to meet him. Surely only the hardest infidel would dare deny that the dauntless Leif, that day, stood waiting on the battlements of Glory, the first to hail her on her journey up.

Loving neighbors took the younger children; Ole and Aaste were old enough to make their own way. The farm was rented out. Then Ole married the renter's daughter and together they operated the farm for many years, finally leaving it to their children. Today, still in the family, the farm is modern and lovely; but, appropriately enough, there still stands one of the old log buildings to remind us of the trials and tears of those who challenged the wilderness and paved the way for later generations.

These five sons and daughters of Ole Aanas were living and present at the 100th anniversary of the farm in 1949. Peter (at the extreme right of picture) died last February. They are the grandchildren of Leif and Helga Aanas.

Medical Work, Hlabisa, South Africa

(Report From Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Hall)

We had a malaria epidemic earlier this year that we thought was very bad, but since the start of the measles epidemic the first part of May we have changed our minds. This is worse. All year so far the hospital has been more than filled with patients, and since the first part of May we have rarely had less than seventy-five patients a day in the hospital. The tent which we were loaned for the malaria epidemic has remained filled with male patients—in fact it remains overfilled. So many of the measles patients are such little children that they have to have their mothers with them, which doesn't help the crowding at all. We have seen measles as we have never seen it before. Almost every child has had severe diarrhea, besides a mouth full of the worst sores we have seen. These conditions are aggravated because most of the children lack the necessary vitamins in their daily diet. Besides these two complications, many of the children have had what we call laryngo-tracheo-bronchitis, in which the inner lining of the throat becomes inflamed and swollen to the point where they cannot breathe. A number of children have died because of this complication. Most of them have also had a certain amount of pneumonia—some of it very severe and not responding to any of the modern antibiotics which we are fortunate to have.

Yesterday we lost Evangelist Qwabe's oldest girl from such a pneumonia. She was twelve years old. Two of the other children from that family are still in the hospital. The last few days we have been having about 85 to 90 patients a day in beds, on the floor, and in spare rooms around the old hospital. We are happy that the patients continue to come to the hospital in spite of a number who have died. It gives them opportunity time and again to hear the Word of God and to see the living witness of those who work among them.

Sister Petrine Solvik continues in her tireless work of personal evangelism among the patients, and we are happy to see how our student nurses also try to speak to the patients about the importance of the healing of their souls. We pray that God will continue to use them and the rest of us who work with them. It seems so easy sometimes for the newer ones of us to say to ourselves that we don't know the language well enough and that there are others who can speak so much better to them. As we see how God can work miracles through our present-day drugs and knowledge of medicine, we pray that we shall see more of the miracles that can be worked in the soul through His Word.

We are happy to see the progress with the new hospital.

The roof is now on the third building, and the plasterers should be starting their work any day. The x-ray man is to come this month to hook up the x-ray, which is already in. The painting is almost completed in the first two buildings and the plumbing almost ready. We are hoping to get into the hospital before Christmas—and we see now that we will have no problem at all in keeping it filled. We hardly ever have more than twenty patients at a time with measles, so you can see that there are plenty of other illnesses also. We are kept more than busy in our work, but we remain well and pray that God will be allowed to use us more and more for the furtherance of His Kingdom and to the glory and honor of His Name.

FOREIGN STUDENTS

Our Mission Board is this year sponsoring three foreign students in the United States for special study. The Rev. Filemon Mkize is here from Zululand, South Africa, and is being specially supported by the student body at Luther Theological Seminary, where he is now in attendance. The Rev. James Hu from Hongkong, who has been serving as pastor among the lepers in our leper colony and more lately as assistant pastor in the Joint Lutheran Congregation in Kowloon, Hongkong, is studying at Concordia College, Moorhead, Minnesota, being granted a tuition scholarship by the school. The Rev. Paul Hu, also from Hongkong, who has during the past year served as pastor for the lepers in our leper colony, is a student at Luther College in Decorah, Iowa. He is granted a tuition scholarship by Luther College and is under special support by the student body for other expenses incurred in his studies. We hope that many of you will become acquainted with these men from our mission fields as they are studying at our schools and that you will make them feel at home among us.

The purpose of special studies for students from abroad is that we might better train them as leaders within their own nation. Miss Ruth Chiang, who has recently completed a study period in this country, has now arrived in Formosa, where she will be serving as a worker in our mission wherever she might be most needed. She writes the following letter from Kowloon, Hongkong, enroute to Formosa, which will indicate the spirit of willing service that is manifested by these people who have received our help for advanced education.

Dear Board of Foreign Mission:

I had a nice journey. The ship arrived Kowloon at 9:30 a.m. yesterday (28th). Now I stay in 27 Granville Road and will leave for Formosa next Wednesday.

By God's grace and your love I had the opportunity to study in America for last five years. Now I want to present you my sincerely thanks for all the help I have had from you both in material and spiritual.

It is a big grant to me that I am sent out as a missionary. I know there is little I can do, but I will try to do my best in whatever I can.

May the Lord bless you richly in all you do.

Very sincerely yours,
RUTH CHIANG

SAILING DATES

Besides the missionaries that have left during August we have a rather large number of missionaries going out to the field for the first time or returning to the field after furlough during September and October. They are as follows:

Sailed on the Robin Goodfellow, September 15, from Brooklyn, N. Y. to Durban, South Africa: The Rev. and Mrs. C. N. Otte and three children (leaving three children at home); Miss Martha L. Pederson.

Sailed on the S. S. African Pilot, September 18, from New York to French Cameroun, West Africa (Sudan field): Mr. and Mrs. Selmer Myklejord and one child (leaving one child at home); Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Noss and two boys.

Left by air in September for French Cameroun, West Africa: Miss Ruth Johnson.

Sailing on the Queen Elizabeth to Southampton, November 27—on Pretoria Castle to Durban on December 3: The Rev. and Mrs. J. N. Otte.

MISSION NEWS

Sudan

We have the sad news from the Sudan Mission field in the French Camerouns that Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Michelsen have lost their second child within a period of two months. A letter from Mrs. Reuben Johnson gives the following note written August 27:

"Our hearts are very heavy this evening. Just before 6:00 this evening, little Mark Michelsen went into convulsions just as his sister Priscilla did two months ago. Hot and cold baths did not help, so Mr. and Mrs. Michelsen and Frances Sterner left within an hour for Ngaoundere where they hoped to find a French doctor. Little Mark seemed to have exactly what Priscilla had. He twitched exactly the same way. He has been such a healthy baby and seemed perfectly well yesterday. He had a little fever today, but not very much. Just before he went into convulsions, he seemed much better and smiled and cooed. We cannot understand it. We pray that if it be God's will, He will spare Mark, but God knows best. Clifford and Lillian have been wonderful testimonies to the natives since the death of their beloved Priscilla. All this certainly reminds us that our children are not our own. God has given them to us, and we must be willing to give them back to God when He wants them, but the parting is hard."

Since this letter was received we have heard from Mr. and Mrs. Michelsen, stating that their little boy Mark had passed away. Our hearts go out to them in this great sorrow that has come to them twice in so brief a period of missionary service. I know all our readers will join in prayer that God will strengthen them through this period of difficulty and that His comfort will give them renewed courage for the work that lies before them. Their letter shows a wonderful spirit of resignation and faith in the Lord, and I know that they have sensed His nearness and His strength in a special way during these months.

From Poli, in the French Camerouns, we have news from Raymond Mathre that they are happily building a church that is being sponsored by the student body at Luther Theological Seminary in St. Paul. He writes in a letter of August 5 as follows:

"Your letters of July 7 and 10 have also been received. We are happy that we may have a part in the fulfillment of the project which was carried by the student body of Luther Theological Seminary during the past year. The work on the reconstruction of the chapel was begun this week. It is not the most favorable time of the year for the particular part of the work that we have in hand now, that of tearing down the building and cleaning and burning the bricks for reuse in the building, but the deadline set by the government for November 15 does not give us much choice as to time. We trust that the God whom we serve is able and will work what would appear to man as impossible."

We also have a letter dated August 18 that gives news about the further development of the building in the following words:

"We are happy to be able to report that since we wrote two weeks ago we have been permitted to have good weather and good help so that the burning of the bricks for the chapel has been completed. It will still be a few days before we will be able to open the kiln and see how well the bricks are burned, but there is reason to believe that the results should be satisfactory. The chapel, as it was, did not give quite the room that we would like for occasions when we had a large gathering, such as at Christmas time and sometimes the Sundays when we had baptism, so we are hoping to be able to enlarge it by the addition of a short wing on each side, making the completed building in the form of a cross. We hope to be able to seat between 180 and 200 when we have the new chapel finished."

Salute to the Daughters

This year marks not only the significant one hundredth anniversary of the Norwegian Synod (see the editorial in the next column). It also marks a milepost along the way of an organization just one fourth that old—the Lutheran Daughters of the Reformation. This is one of the official auxiliary organizations of The Evangelical Lutheran Church. It happens that on the very date of this issue of LUTHERAN HERALD the LDR is twenty-five years old. We believe that the editorial pages should take cognizance of this anniversary. We are also happy to publish an historical article on the LDR.

The auxiliaries of The Evangelical Lutheran Church occupy a unique position. The organizational structure of our Church does not formally include them. They are in no sense under the control of the Church. Yet they have come, over the years, to be one of the major adjuncts of our church life. Reaching into the heart of almost every congregation, they provide an outlet for the desire of all Christians for self-expression and for specialized service to the Church and its Lord. Only eternity will record the full measure of blessing which has come to us from the Women's Missionary Federation, the Brotherhood, the Luther League—and the Lutheran Daughters of the Reformation.

Yes—the Lutheran Daughters of the Reformation. The Church's daughters; our daughters; the girls and young women of the congregations of the Church. As a national organization, the LDR is twenty-five years old. During that time certain areas of service to the Church have become the special province of this auxiliary and certain emphases have developed. To many, the LDR still brings to mind first of all Alaska.

But on this twenty-fifth birthday of a great auxiliary, we are more inclined to mention matters just as significant even though not so well known. There is the deliberate and carefully considered emphasis on a warm and evangelical spirit in all that the LDR undertakes. It would be utterly unfair to say that this is not a characteristic of all our auxiliaries. But it is true to say that in no group within our Church has there been greater emphasis on the intimate, personal relationship between a child of God and the Lord and Savior of all than in the LDR. As we think back over the years, we believe that that is the chief characteristic of the organization. It reveals to one and all that it is made up of those "whose hearts God has touched."

There is the emphasis on sacrificial, "plus" giving, on stewardship as an act of love as well as a meeting of special opportunity. And there is the opportunity for special missionary interests.

For all these and many other things, the Church today thanks God and wishes for the Lutheran Daughters of the Reformation many years of increasing usefulness.

EDITORIAL

One Hundredth

This issue appears almost exactly half way between the two dates set aside for the observance of the centenary of the Norwegian Synod. On October 4, at Luther Valley in Wisconsin, the entire day was set aside for festivities. This is the congregation which was the actual scene of the founding of the pioneer synodical organization in October, exactly a hundred years ago. On October 18, similar festivities will be held in Decorah, Iowa, which became the headquarters and educational center of the Synod.

While 1843 will always be considered the year of the birth of what is now The Evangelical Lutheran Church, there is still not a little reason for us to take note of 1953 as an important centennial year. The synodical organization established at Luther Valley a hundred years ago—The Synod for the Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church in America—was for a generation the largest such organization among Norwegian people in America. A large segment of what became the United Norwegian Lutheran Church (formed in 1890) was originally a part of the Norwegian Synod. Thus it will be seen that a major part of The Evangelical Lutheran Church has its roots in the modest synodical organization which saw the light of day a century ago.

To attempt to evaluate the significance of this event here would take us too far afield. The centennial book is just now off the press and will provide an estimate of the meaning and development of the Norwegian Synod. There are, however, a few points which we should like to summarize as our contribution to this centennial observance.

Perhaps the greatest contribution of the Synod to Norwegian American Lutheran development was that, from the outset, it stressed conservative, confessional Lutheranism. This is not to be emphasized in distinction to other Lutheran groups. It simply refers to the historical truth that the men who founded the Synod came out of a church life in Norway which had come dangerously close to stranding on the reef of rationalism. Those men had paid dearly for their confessional faith and were of the firm conviction that, come what may, their synodical organization on American soil should be soundly Lutheran.

RIALS

Related to that characteristic of the infant body is the fact that a successful attempt was made at the very outset to make the Church an orderly, disciplined organization. It is of some significance that one of the German American Lutheran periodicals of that day devoted a lengthy editorial to an appraisal of the constitution of the Norwegian Synod and held it up as a model document of its kind. It has been said at times that the leaders of the Norwegian Synod attempted to transplant to American soil the roots of the state Church of Norway. We do not believe that the facts bear out this contention. While it is true that there were similarities (how could it have been otherwise?) the simple truth is that the laymen and clergy of one hundred years ago were attempting to plant an American Church, a free Church.

As a matter of fact, the synodical machinery set up was definitely democratic in that it was congregation-centered. The sovereignty of the local congregation was to be maintained at all costs. One seeks in vain to find anywhere in the constitution of the body the slightest sign of the hierarchy which was a part of every European state Church in existence at the time. To what degree the ideal was maintained is, of course, quite another question. There never has been a synodical organization which was able fully to maintain its complete democratic ideal. But that does not alter the fact that the ideal was there and was taken seriously. The truth is that the organizational structure of The Evangelical Lutheran Church today varies not one whit from what the founders of the Synod wrote into their basic document a hundred years ago.

The Norwegian Synod was avowedly a missionary body. A finer ideal of Home Mission work has never been embodied in a synodical organization. It was taken for granted that every pastor of the Church must devote a great deal of time to seeking out his scattered and unchurched countrymen and that the people of his parish must accommodate themselves to sharing his services for weeks at a time with others.

And it was a teaching Church. Out of its organization came Luther College, the purpose of which was to raise up an indigenous American ministry. Out of it came high ideals of theological training, first carried out by sending theological students to St. Louis for training, later by establishing a seminary of its own. In parish education, the effort was constantly to keep standards high. The ideal of two years' instruction before confirmation is practically as old as the Synod. The ideal of the so-called "parochial school" was never attained, but the fact that it was held does prove that the standard of a trained and indoctrinated laity was never forgotten.

What of the spiritual life? A man who joined the Synod many years later—when the men who had founded it were no longer young and were fast disappearing from the scene of their earthly labors—once told the writer that it was the warmly evangelical spirit of the men of the Synod with whom he came in contact which made the deepest impression upon him. It is true that there was less emphasis on expressional Christianity than in some of the other groups, perhaps less than there should have been. But no one can deny that the spirit of the Synod was evangelical.

A hundred years is not a long time as God measures time. Yet it seems a long time. The Norwegian Synod is no more. It gave up its life to enter a new and broader usefulness in 1917—one of the three bodies which formed a new organic relationship in that year. Its pages through the 64 years of its existence are not uniformly well written. Mistakes were made and opportunities were neglected. The long years of controversy supplied pages better unwritten.

Yet who shall say that God did not use and bless the Norwegian Synod? And who shall say that its spirit in its present incarnation as a part of The Evangelical Lutheran Church does not go on living? The miracle of our Church is, of course, the running together into one stream the three great streams of synodical existence which make up our Church. All were soundly Lutheran, as we pray that The Evangelical Lutheran Church is soundly Lutheran. All were warmly evangelical, as we pray that The Evangelical Lutheran Church is warmly evangelical. All sought to serve and glorify the Lord, even as we do today.

The old lines are long since forgotten. The young people of today's generation in the ELC look blank when one speaks of "Synod," "United," "Hauge's." That is as it should be. But all of us, young and old, may well take occasion of this significant centenary to thank God for the rock whence we were hewn, the hole of the pit whence we were digged. And is not that the purpose of anniversary observances in the Church?

Chaplain, can't you do something? My daughter wants to waste her life by working in this place!"

The urgent plea could well have come from Mrs. Olson, the mother of Mary, an affiliate nurse. Affiliation is a time of firsthand experience for student nurses in various branches of the nursing service. During her three months at our hospital, Mary had become convinced of the important contribution she, as a Christian and as a nurse, could render our people. In a few months she would don banded-cap and pin to begin a career of service in Christ's name. She felt she could best serve in "this place."

But this, Mrs. Olson declared, would be a waste of her life. Mrs. Olson was proud of Mary, proud of her choice of career, proud of her concern for applying in her work the faith which she professed. Why then the distress over Mary's interest in "this place"? Only because "this place" is a mental hospital.

Unfortunately, Mrs. Olson, like most of us, had her own idea about an "insane asylum," as she called it. She wasn't asking questions. But perhaps you would like to ask:

WHAT IS A MENTAL HOSPITAL?

It is a hospital for the care and cure of the mentally ill. Some are small, privately-owned hospitals and frequently called sanatoriums or retreats. Those of which we shall be speaking are state owned and operated. The treatment of mental illness is time-consuming. Recovery is usually gradual, occurring over a period of months or years rather than days or weeks. The financial burden of such long term hospitalization would be impossible for most of us. The state-operated hospital enables all of us to share in making the burden bearable.

The common term, an "asylum," is in a sense an appropriate designation for a mental hospital. It does afford asylum to those who for a time must withdraw from society. Within this restricted environment many find that which is necessary to enable them to return to society.

Great strides have been made in the recent past in the understanding and treatment of mental illnesses. To be sure, there still are more questions unanswered than answered. Unfortunately, public compassion has not been stirred by the plight of the mentally ill to the degree that it has for the polio victim or the TB patient. As a result, research has been and still is hampered severely by lack of funds.

AN ENVIRONMENT OF HEALING

A mental hospital can be described in many ways: a group of buildings, a burden to the taxpayer, a place where specialized medical techniques are carried out, a retreat for treatment of personality disfunction. But above all, it is an environment of healing.

This environment is created and sustained by a corps of compassionate doctors, psychologists, nurses, psychiatric aides, skilled maintenance personnel, etc. They are dedicated to the service of others, the assisting of the mentally ill to assist themselves toward "health." All too frequently their services are without much reward financially or in public esteem. They give of themselves in compassion and understanding. They accept and encourage the distressed who through suffering are like a bruised reed.

Such services can best be rendered by those who are calm and peaceful and friendly within themselves. These attributes are the fruit of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control—given by grace through faith in Jesus Christ. Here is a field of service open to those who can love because God first loved them. Mrs. Olson declared such service would be a "wasted life." Perhaps. It depends upon the values by which you measure life.

GOD'S CHILDREN ALSO

Mental illness is no respecter of persons. Rich and poor, city dweller and rural resident, unschooled and highly educated, old and young, believer and atheist—all these and more are numbered among the patients of mental hospitals. Occasionally some one will insist, "If they were really good Christians they would not be there!" Perhaps. But if by "really good Christians" they mean those who are active church members—some here were. Or if they refer to professing faith in Jesus Christ as personal Savior—many here do.

We need frequently to remind ourselves:

*God hath not promised skies always blue,
Flower-strewn pathways all our lives through;
God hath not promised sun without rain,
Joy without sorrow, peace without pain.*

God has not promised the Christian automatic freedom from trials and tribulations, tensions and anxieties, sickness and death. In fact, Paul suggests that "suffering produces endurance and endurance produces character, and character produces hope, and hope does not disappoint us for God's love has been poured into our hearts through the Holy Spirit which has been given to us."

Yes, Christians, too, suffer emotional disturbances. Frequently in their struggle toward health—their search for a meaningful life, rightly related to God and others and self—they grow in faith and knowledge and love. For them, that

God hath promised strength for the day

*Rest for the labor, light for the way
Grace for all trials, help from above,
Unfailing sympathy, undying love*
can be especially meaningful.

For many years the mental hospitals were almost forgotten by the Church. The exceptional congregation maintained contact with their hospitalized brethren. Some pastors ministered occasionally to those of their flock abiding in these strange pastures. Most hospitals arranged with ministers of the community for more or less regular Sunday services. But, for the most part, those who entered the mental hospital were separated by suspicion and fear and ignorance from the ministrations of Christ's Church. Thank God this is no longer the case.

IN THE DARKNESS—LIGHT

A growing understanding of mental illness, expanded hospital facilities and staffs, the devoted service of a small number of trained men—all have contributed to a recognition of the value of chaplaincy services. In more and more states, hospitals desire to install chaplains as members of their staffs.

We rejoice that our Church is alert to this newly-opened door. Our seminary offers graduate instruction in ministering to the ill, including experience in a mental hospital. The Board of Charities is active in selecting and training men for this ministry. Within the last few months the Rev. B. B. Nielsen and the Rev. Martin Trygstad have begun full-time work in mental hospitals in the Dakotas. More are in training that they might bring the Light to those who are in shadows. In this we may rejoice and thank God.

BEAR YE ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS

But let us not be deceived. Resident chaplains in our mental hospitals will increase, not decrease, the local congregation's burden for the mentally ill. How can this be? An eighty-four year old man speaks: "Yes, I joined . . . Lutheran Church in '91. I was mighty active too. I guess I'm still a member there, though I'm not sure. I've been here almost three years. Maybe they have scratched my name!" Three years! without a visit! or a letter! or any other tangible evidence of being remembered by his fellow citizens of the Communion of Saints!

And a young housewife writes: "How I miss attending your services. The first few weeks I was home I tried going to church. Practically no one spoke to me. I felt I wasn't wanted. I've been listening to . . . Lutheran Church's radio services since." She sought to come out of the land of the shadow, but no light shone to guide her.

Increasingly, home congregations are becoming aware of these who suffer. And having them called to their remembrance, they are constrained by Christ's compassion to minister to them.

LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE

There is much that could be done. Here are a few suggestions.

- Remember them before the throne of grace, for it is the Lord "that healeth all our diseases."
- Let them know you remember. A visit, a package, a letter can for a time dispel dark loneliness.
- Receive them gladly when they return. A member of the body of Christ, separated for a time with suffering, has by the grace of God returned. Receive ye him.
- Become acquainted with the hospital in your community. Knowing the truth can liberate us from fear born of ignorance.
- Assist in ministering to them. "Truly, I say to you, as you did it to one of the least of these, my brethren, you did it to me." Contact the chaplain in your local mental hospital for suggestions.

MAY THIS BE OUR PRAYER

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies and God of all comfort; who comforteth us in all our afflictions that we may be able to comfort them that are in any affliction, through the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God" (II Corinthians 1:4).

They Built Their Church

O. W. Sougstad, Pastor
Faith Lutheran Church, Calamus, Iowa

The town of Calamus, Iowa, is just a small dot on the map. Heavy traffic breezes through the town on the way to Chicago and other eastern points on busy U. S. Highway 30. Fast streamliners and heavily-loaded freights pierce the air and shake the ground throughout the day and night as they roar by on the Northwestern's double tracks.

In the midst of this speed and busy traffic, Calamus is just an average small town in a good farming community. Yet there has been something happening which is not just a common experience, as concrete, stone, wood, and steel have been moulded together by loving hands into a beautiful house of worship. We thank God that it is not an unusual sight to see the cross of Jesus towering over the streets and houses of our average American community. Neither is it unique to see a sturdily-built church edifice and parish education unit standing beneath the bell tower.

Behind the building of each house of worship lies a story of love, sacrifice, and sweat. Such a picture stands in the background of the building project of Faith Evangelical Lutheran Church in Calamus as 136 men, women, and children attempted the "impossible" task and saw it through to successful completion. This article is written with the fervent hope and prayer that it will inspire others to follow and surpass the efforts of these consecrated Christians.

This congregation began with just three things: the love for lost souls who needed to know the Savior; the vision of what could be accomplished for the Kingdom of God in their community; and the name "Faith." Formerly members of Our Savior's Lutheran Church southeast of Calamus (people of God who have long been noted for their deep spiritual life and missionary-minded stewardship), this small group of souls committed themselves to the project of moving into the town of Calamus to conquer and occupy for Jesus Christ.

They had no house of worship, no parsonage—frankly, there was nothing but a field in which to work, where precious souls desperately needed to know the Savior.

Would God open the way? Would He open the door in the town of Calamus? Yes, God would open the door, but not without cost. Through a tragedy that this generation of the congregation will never forget, the way was opened. On an icy December morning nearly four years ago a heavy freight truck went out of control and jack-knifed into the path of an on-coming car. The car's occupants, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stueland, Sr., were instantly killed. The sudden loss of these loyal Christian people stunned the congregation and the community. In the midst of their sorrow, the Stueland sons and daughter saw in this tragedy the opportunity for their church to move forward. Even though they had been offered $18,500 in cash for the former home of their parents, they declined the offer and presented the house and adjoining lots as a gift to the congregation. This provided the congregation with an adequate parsonage and building grounds in the most favorable location in the town of Calamus for the building of a church.

God opened the door, and by the power of God a Christ-witnessing church would move in and occupy for God, for the salvation of souls, and the building up of His Kingdom.

Immediately the congregation began to move forward under the guidance of their pastor, the Reverend Reuben H. Redal. The pastor and his family moved into the parsonage, and services were held in a vacant downtown business building. Faith Church was on the march, as precious souls were brought to the Savior and received Him into their hearts and lives.

EXTERIOR AND INTERIOR VIEWS OF FAITH LUTHERAN CHURCH, CALAMUS, IOWA

The congregation needed a house of worship. There was not a penny in a building fund. Such a small group, it would seem, should need every dollar they could scrape together to carry on the normal work of a congregation, without even daring to think about a building project. Congregations several times larger might easily have said, "Impossible!" But these consecrated people of God engaged an architect, a contractor from their own membership, and in love mingled with sacrifice and sweat began to build.

With determination and foresight, confident that the power of the Gospel would mean enlarged needs in the future, they started construction of the nave, basement, and parish education unit—a structure that could more than accommodate a congregation three times their size. (Their vision proved right, because the church grew by 80 per cent during the three years of the building program.) Farmers and businessmen became dirt excavators, concrete and mortar mixers, blocklayers, stonecutters, steelworkers, electricians, plumbers, and carpenters. Their wives worked alongside them, wielding the tools of their new trades just as handily as they were accustomed to using paring knives in canning season.

In the midst of their building program their pastor was called away to another field in the Lord's work. The president of the congregation, Dr. C. J. Christensen, the church council, and the building committee continued to lead them forward in their project. Even during the change of pastors they did not miss a single step in their forward march, and the writer of this article was installed as they began the final year of their building program.

These loyal, hard-working people gave themselves so wholeheartedly to their proposed five-year building project that they were able to cut two years from their estimated date of completion. They sacrificed, labored, and mopped perspiration in the summer's heat. They sacrificed, labored, and froze in the winter. Home and farm needs were largely forgotten except for the necessary work of keeping home, farm, and business operating. In terms of time, talents, and money, their Church came first. Now that they have seen the completion of their church building, it will take some of them many months to catch up with work they would like to have had done at home.

The financial picture, too, reflects the courage and consecration with which Faith Church moved forward. When one surveys the financial report, he would be tempted to say, "These people have truly given until they have been hurt by giving." One would be quickly corrected by the reply, "Rather than that, we gave until we were blessed." That is typical of the spirit in which these people live and work.

In the three years of their work they have raised $19,000, on the average, in cash, for their building program, in addition to the usual budget of a busy congregation. Most of the $57,000 thus raised was by sacrificial giving. The rest of it was raised by the "God's Acres" program of the Brotherhood. One man has donated the use of 30 acres of land for five years, seed and fertilizer furnished. The men of the Brotherhood have farmed other land of church members on shares. Thus they have turned more of their time, talents, and money into working capital for God's work.

All told, the amount of anticipated indebtedness as of December 31, 1953, will be thirty to thirty-five thousand dollars on a structure that has cost $102,000 to build and equip—a building that would be worth twice that figure in a city setting and without volunteer labor. The parsonage and grounds alone are easily worth half of the total indebtedness. They have all of this, with an evangelical spirit seldom excelled, just because they were willing to express their love in sacrifice and sweat!

On September 6, 1953, the newly-completed house of worship was dedicated with Dr. S. C. Eastvold, the first vice president of The Evangelical Lutheran Church, officiating. As the congregation came into the nave on that day and sat down in the pews with a prayer of thanksgiving in their hearts, they could look around them and feel a touch of rightful pride in their labor of love. The edifice is as beautiful and worshipful as any this writer has ever seen, but the real beauty is seen in the faces of those who worship there. They are grateful to God for His mighty works and wondrous ways, not just because He has given them an impressive house for worship but because nearly half of their membership is comprised of souls newly added to His Kingdom. Thus they truly have cause for rejoicing! And the fields are ever-ripening unto the harvest of precious souls. By the grace and power of God, with the loyal witness of a Christ-centered Church, souls will be added to the Body of Christ.

And what about this building and all its beauty and attractiveness—which has been built upon sacrifice, tears, love, and sweat? Much as the loving hands that molded the building materials together cherish the completed product, they have turned over the title of ownership and possession to God. As for this loyal band that built the house of God, they will continue to work, win, and occupy for Jesus Christ until He comes in glory.

One Day We Shall See

Harold B. Kildahl

THE TWENTIETH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

October 18, 1953

Text: Matthew 22:1-14

Many aspects of the Christian Church and the faith are obscured to human eyes and understanding. It is as Paul puts it: We see through a glass darkly now, as men who look through smoked glasses, but then, one day, the day of Christ's return, we shall see clearly the veiled mysteries of the faith.

The parable helps us. It projects the mind of the believers to the end, out to the end of time and the establishment of the Eternal Kingdom. One who enters there a saved soul will look back (if such language is permissible) and will see—

One day we shall see that the chosen people were sincerely invited to faith in Christ. Through prophets and sages of old God spoke to His people, always pointing them to the coming Savior. The day came, Christ was born, He lived, taught, loved, and served; but those to whom He was promised rejected Him. They "made light of the invitation and devoted themselves to personal pursuits." The parable helps us to see that spiritual disaster awaits those who reject the promise of salvation.

One day we shall see that the professed Church, the Church on earth as we know it, is not a haven for believers only. In it will be found the saved and the unsaved, the believers and the unbelievers, the good and the bad of the parable; earnest souls and hypocrites. Here and now it is not given to men to discern the hearts of others or to judge the faith of others, though it is said on good authority that "by their fruits ye shall know them." It is for God, the eternal Father who looks upon the hearts of men, to ultimately render judgment on the souls of men. It is our business now to bring the message of the Gospel, the invitation of God to as many men as possible, for only as the Holy Spirit works through Word and Sacrament to perfect the causes of God in men can there be hope that men shall be saved.

One day we shall see that the judgment of God is based on the response of men to the Gospel. Faith is the garment of the saved—faith, alive and living. Men of faith, believing men, the True Church, shall be as the bride of Christ, and men without faith will inherit only the outer darkness of separation from God.

Much is now obscured, but then, in the great last day, we shall see. Good friend, here and now, today and every day to come, listen, hear, heed the invitation of the Gospel. It is the same over and over again—"Hear, and your soul shall live." Amen.

Tools for the Tempted

Magnus A. Dahlen

Temptation is everywhere. All are exposed to it. It is not the fact of being tempted that is so serious, but the fact of surrendering to it that is.

We also expect to discuss ways in which we are able to remove some types of temptation, but the immediate thing for us to consider is how we may get at the tools to combat it lest we ourselves be overcome.

What are some of the tools that we may use lest we surrender? Let it be added that if we do not get at these tools, there will be an invasion of our homes, and we ourselves will have a part in some of this terrific onslaught of juvenile delinquency which is over-running large areas of our country.

In any situation which must be improved or corrected, we must begin somewhere; and the place to begin is where we are.

For a period of weeks this column has laid much emphasis on the contribution of our splendid system of preparation for confirmation, and the importance of parents giving full co-operation to the system in the matter of time, attendance, and lesson preparation on the part of the young.

Then there is the all-important Sunday school as it reaches way down even into the pre-kindergarten age. America would be in a sad situation today if it were not for the influence of the thousands of Sunday schools, where from the earliest days of childhood the young are given the opportunity to learn the will and the way of God.

When was it that we as a nation were almost on the brink of completely losing that "celestial fire called conscience"? Do you remember back in the gas rationing and other rationing days when so many got into the philosophy of thinking that just so you got by it would be all right? Thousands have continued in that frame of thinking, applying it in even more serious situations. And many young people who witnessed all these things in World War II days have grown up to be men and women who follow the cheating and chiseling way of their elders.

It may be that the only way back is through their children as these are trained in our Sunday schools, where they hear of the all-loving, and yet just, all-wise and all-seeing God.

Until we as congregations and members of a community have more of what it takes to literally remove some of the temptations that confront our young, let us at least see that they get at the tools to combat temptation so that they may be able to stand in an evil day.

May God bless our Sunday schools and all who have a part in them.

DON'T GIVE UP!

Read I Kings 19:1-18

And behold, there came a voice to him, and said, "What are you doing here, Elijah?"

Elijah had the answer to that question, all right. At least he thought he did. He was hiding out in a cave at Horeb because his life was in danger. Single-handed he had fought Baal worship, and a death sentence from the queen was the result. What could one do in such a situation but flee for one's life and hide?

God told Elijah what to do. He was to go back and be about the Lord's business. The prophet of the Almighty God was not to sit trembling in a cave. God had plans for the future, and even the present was not as bad as Elijah imagined. How often we too become discouraged and defeated and are tempted to withdraw from the battle. May this event in the life of Elijah remind us that the marching orders of our Lord are not "Retreat" but "Go."

Dear God, help us to remember that Thy Kingdom can never be defeated. Amen.

IN THEE I TAKE REFUGE

Read Psalm 16:1-11

Preserve me, O God, for in thee I take refuge.

This is the cry of one who has come to the consciousness that in him dwells no good thing. The cry of one who knows that all he merits is the wrath and punishment of God. That apart from the goodness and mercy of God he is lost. But it is not basically a cry of despair but of faith. Faith in God who is a refuge for the sinner. Faith in God who is full of mercy and grace to the undeserving. Faith in God who is a refuge to those who seek Him. Finally, it is an affirmation "In Thee I take refuge." It is throwing oneself completely upon God. Only he who has taken the "leap of faith" can pray "Preserve me, O God."

Other refuge have I none;
Hangs my helpless soul on Thee;
Leave, ah, leave me not alone,
Still support and comfort me!

Dear God, we have no hope for time or eternity apart from Thee. Preserve us, for in Thee we take refuge. Amen.

WHAT DO YOU WANT?

Read II Kings 2:1-15

When they had crossed, Elijah said to Elisha, "Ask what I shall do for you, before I am taken away from you." And Elisha said, "I pray you, let me inherit a double share of your spirit."

Elijah was Elisha's spiritual leader and father. For years Elisha had ministered to him as they traveled about through the country. Now Elijah was old and about to leave this life. He gives Elisha an opportunity to make a final request before they are parted. Elisha's answer tells us a lot about what kind of a man he was. His one desire was that he might witness as faithfully of God as Elijah had done. I am sure Elijah was pleased to hear this request. Only God, of course, could grant it. It is God who calls, but what a joy to know hearts are ready to listen and obey. What a thrill to a teacher to note hunger for spiritual power in his pupils. To those who ask, God gives His Holy Spirit freely.

Dear God, may we desire such things as are right and good in Thy sight. Amen.

OUR MAKER

Read Psalm 95:1-11

O come, let us worship and bow down, let us kneel before the Lord, our Maker!

We live our lives surrounded by man-made things. Just about everything we touch bears the inscription "Made by man." Our age has to a large extent lost its consciousness of God as our Creator and Maker. The awe and wonder of a creature approaching his Creator is largely lost in our worship. The Psalmist invites us to come out of our apartments and houses to walk under the star-studded heavens that God created. He takes us into the depths of the earth, he asks us to look up to the towering mountains, he directs our gaze out over the oceans that stretch beyond our sight, and asks us to look at the dry land with its wealth and variety. Then he says: All this is made by God. It is the work of His hands. This God is also your Maker. O come, worship Him in awe and reverence, bend your knees, for you stand in the presence of your Maker. Give Him the glory due His Name! Amen.

THE FAITH OF A CHILD

Read II Kings 5:1-14

She said to her mistress, "Would that my lord were with the prophet who is in Samaria! He would cure him of his leprosy."

This little Jewish slave girl had no doubt in her mind that the prophet of God could cure her master of leprosy. Her faith was contagious. Her mistress spoke to Naaman, and Naaman spoke to the king. Every step of the way it was: "The little slave girl says. . . ." The result was that Naaman was not only cured of his leprosy, but was also brought to faith in the true God.

Children are some of the most successful missionaries today. Not because they know so much, but because they believe so completely. The simple faith of a child has brought many an adult to the place of healing, to the cross of Christ. The more we approach a child-like faith, the more effective witnesses for God we become.

Dear God, give us a simple faith that takes Thee at Thy Word. Help us to remember that nothing is impossible for Thee. Amen.

WHAT SHALL I RENDER TO THE LORD?

Read Psalm 116:1-19

What shall I render to the Lord for all his bounty to me?

When a person has come to the place in his life where he asks that question, it is a sign that he is growing up spiritually. A little baby accepts without question all the attention and sacrifices of its parents. But as it grows older, it asks the question: What can I do to show my love to my parents who have done so much for me? The soul that has been forgiven by God in Christ, who has experienced salvation, who has been brought out of darkness into the light, naturally asks the same question over against God. The Psalmist gives his answer in verses seventeen and eighteen. It is the same answer as the one we have in the explanation to the Second Article. "For all of which I am in duty bound to thank, praise, serve, and obey Him. This is most certainly true."

Dear God, we can never repay Thee for Thy goodness to us. But we would give Thee our thanks, praise, and service. Amen.

Schools and Colleges

Edited by the Division of Higher Education

Homecoming 1953 will be very special at the colleges of the ELC. Such events as a centennial celebration, a groundbreaking ceremony, a college golden anniversary, and first services in a new college chapel will bring hundreds of alumni back to their respective alma maters.

Alumni and friends of Augustana College will gather on the campus October 9, 10, and 11 for the thirtieth annual Viking Days celebration. Highlighting the festivities will be the groundbreaking ceremonies for the new Mikkelsen Memorial Library at 3 p.m. on Sunday afternoon. Governor Sigurd Anderson will be the principal speaker.

Other events include the coronation of the Viking Days queen which will begin the festivities Friday night, the football game with South Dakota State Saturday afternoon at 2 p.m., and a smorgasbord Saturday evening followed by a show known as Viking Varieties.

Dr. Conrad Hoyer, executive director of American Missions with the National Lutheran Council, will be the guest speaker at the homecoming worship services Sunday morning at 11:00 a.m. The Rev. Emil Erpestad of the Augustana faculty will be the liturgist.

The Concordia College homecoming will be held October 16, 17, and 18, according to co-chairman Ralph Hoppe, Sun Prairie, Wis., and Clemence Gronfor, Frost, Minn. The queen will be crowned at a coronation ceremony in the new gym-auditorium Friday evening.

On Saturday the Concordia Alumni Association will hold its annual meeting at 10 a.m. and the alumni banquet at 5 p.m. The football game, Concordia vs. Hamline, will be held in the evening at Dakotah Field in Fargo.

Outstanding event for Sunday afternoon will be the concert by the College Band, directed by Leif Christianson, and the Concordia Choir, directed by Paul J. Christiansen, in the gym at 2:30 p.m. President Joseph L. Knutson will bring the greeting on this occasion.

Special reunions to be held during the weekend are for the members of the choir which toured Norway in 1949, and for the members of the classes of 1943 and 1928.

Homecoming festivities at Luther College, October 16-18, will be highlighted by a celebration on Sunday of the 100th anniversary of the founding of one of the pioneer groups now a part of the ELC.

Heading the list of festival speakers will be Dr. J. A. Aasgaard, Dr. Christian K. Preus, Dr. Roy Harrisville, and Dr. T. F. Gullixson.

As a special feature for the festivities of Luther's homecoming, the Nordic Cathedral Choir will sing a cantata, "Thee God We Praise," composed for the event by Dr. Sigvart A. Hofland of the Luther College Music faculty. Mr. Weston Noble will conduct.

"Growing with Washington" will be the theme of the Pacific Lutheran College homecoming October 9-11. This is in keeping with the centennial statehood celebration in Washington this year.

State Governor Arthur B. Langlie will address the opening program of homecoming weekend Friday evening in the chapel auditorium. He will also crown the queen and fete the princesses.

On Saturday the football game between PLC and Central Washington College will be played at 2 p.m. at Lincoln Bowl. The annual "Powder Puff" bowl football game between the freshman and upper class girls will be played Saturday morning.

Alumni will be guests at a banquet Saturday evening in the college commons. At 8 p.m. Jack Rank, renowned Shakespearean actor, will present "The Taming of the Shrew" in the Chapel Auditorium.

Dr. J. P. Flueger of the faculty will preach the sermon at the homecoming worship service and the Choir of the West will sing.

To the alumni of St. Olaf College will go the first opportunity to worship in the new Boe Memorial Chapel. Homecoming Sunday, October 25, will mark the first use of the new building, and two services will be held on that day, at nine and eleven a.m., with Dr. Clemens M. Granskou, college president, preaching the sermons.

Homecoming at St. Olaf begins with a pep fest, bonfire, and coronation on Friday evening. The football game against Lawrence College will begin at 1:30 p.m. on Saturday. Preceding the game at 12:30 there will be a parade through downtown Northfield, featuring twenty-five floats and a marching unit of 400 cadets from the St. Olaf Air Force ROTC.

The premiere performance of "Springtime Madness," an operetta written by two St. Olaf faculty members, will be given at 7:30 p.m. Saturday evening in the gymnasium. Music for the new operetta was written by G. Winston Cassler, member of the St. Olaf music faculty and well-known composer, and the story was written by Dr. William Narum, member of the St. Olaf philosophy department. The production will be directed by Fred Schmidt.

This year marks the golden anniversary of Waldorf College, so very special events are being planned in connection with homecoming October 9-11.

These events will occur on Sunday when the Fiftieth Anniversary Program will be given in the Civic Auditorium at Forest City. Featured speaker will be Dr. J. A. Aasgaard, president of the ELC. Following this program, Dr. Martin Hegland of St. Olaf College will dedicate the new president's residence.

Festivities begin at Waldorf with the traditional coronation on Friday evening. Saturday events include a meeting of the Greater Waldorf Association, homecoming parade, football game with Northwestern College of Orange City, anniversary homecoming banquet, and a reunion program in the evening.

Sunday worship services will be conducted by the Rev. Arndt Halvorson of Minneapolis and Dr. J. C. K. Preus, general secretary of the Board of Christian Education of the ELC.

DISTRICTS

Eastern

Spooner, Wis. Trinity Church, parish of the Rev. Byron C. Nelson, gave Sept. 27 a reception in honor of the Rev. and Mrs. Conrad Halvorson, now missionaries to Madagascar, formerly in charge of the Spooner parish. A purse was presented to the guests of honor.

Curtiss, Wis. After adjustments with "The Evangelical and Reformed Church" a merger has taken place between the local parish of the Church named and the local parish of The Evangelical Lutheran Church. This merger took place after a course in Christian doctrine had been given the combined membership by the pastor, the Rev. O. K. Odland.

Rowe, Ill. St. Paul Church at Rowe (near the city of Pontiac), parish of the Rev. R. O. Overgaard, observed its 90th anniversary Aug. 30. Speakers were: Dr. Martin Anderson, president of the Eastern District, the Rev. O. B. Nilsen, Rothsay, Minn., and the Rev. Arthur M. Olson, Norway, Iowa, the latter two having formerly served the parish. Greetings were brought by Mrs. J. C. Hjelmervik, widow of a former pastor of the parish, and by Miss Signe Sletten and Miss Hilda Vevle, whose fathers served the congregation as pastors.

Southern Minnesota

Winona, Minn. Cedar Valley Church, a rural church served by Dr. L. E. Brynestad of Winona, celebrated Sept. 20 the 80th anniversary of the erection of its church edifice, and held at the same time its annual mission festival. The speaker was a former pastor of the parish, the Rev. H. T. Braa, now chaplain at the Minnesota Soldiers' Home. The beginnings of the Cedar Valley community dates back to 1854. The congregation was organized in 1871.

Fairmont, Minn. Grace Church, parish of the Rev. W. L. Conradson, celebrated Sept. 13 the 25th anniversary of its founding. Among the speakers were Dr. O. G. Malmin, editor of Lutheran Herald, and two former pastors of the congregation, O. B. Endresen, St. Paul, Minn., and Adrien Olson, Madelia, Minn. The congregation has a membership of about 1,300 and a Sunday school of about 300 pupils.

NEW MONTANA PARSONAGE

The new parsonage of First Lutheran Church, Miles City, Montana, parish of the Rev. Nels C. Carlson, was dedicated Sept. 20 by District President Daehlin. The old parsonage is now used as a parish house and as additional classroom space for the congregation's rapidly growing Sunday school.

27, at which the speakers were Dr. S. A. Berge, Fargo, N. Dak., Dr. E. C. Reinertson, president of the Southern Minnesota District; and the Rev. Conrad Thompson, evangelism director, and for the following four nights lay visitors' instruction meetings led by Dr. Berge. Mrs. Jeanne Mossman Wiger is the new parish worker of Christ Church.

South Dakota

Elk Point, S. Dak. St. Paul Church, parish of the Rev. A. P. Tidemann, celebrated its 90th anniversary Aug. 16. The anniversary sermon was preached by Dr. L. M. Stavig, president of Augustana College, Sioux Falls. Other speakers were three former pastors of the parish: C. B. Runsvold, W. I. Aamoth, and D. G. Jacobson, and also the following sons of two earlier pastors of the congregation, Pastor Olaf Lysnes and Mr. S. G. Reinertson.

Pacific

Vashon, Wash. Vashon Church, parish of the Rev. Bernt I. Dahl, Jr., celebrated its 50th anniversary Sept. 13. Speakers were Dr. H. L. Foss, president of the Pacific District, and the Rev. A. O. Aasen, who served the parish from 1936 to 1939.

Pineville, Ore. At the fall meeting of the Eastern Oregon Circuit Sept. 20 at Our Saviour's Church the main speaker was the Rev. Roy E. Olson of Pacific Lutheran College, Parkland, Wash. He stressed the strategic position of the Christian College in the present world situation.

OBITUARIES

Miss Ingeborg Einarsen

Miss Ingeborg Einarsen, the last charter member of Trinity Church, Hoboken, New Jersey, died Sept. 10, 94 years of age. Funeral services were held Sept. 14 at the church named, the Rev. Richard Nybro officiating. Miss Einarsen came to Hoboken from Norway in 1887. Among other founders of Trinity Church were also a sister and three brothers, all of them now deceased. She was active in congregational affairs until she six years ago moved to the Eger Home for the Aged on Staten Island, New York. She is survived by seven nephews and three nieces.

Joseph A. Jorgensen

Joseph A. Jorgensen, Foley, Alabama, earlier a member of Park View Church, Chicago, Ill., died Sept. 15 in Chicago during a visit in that city. Funeral services took place Sept. 18 in Park View Church, the Rev. Merlin I. Seal officiating. Born in Asker, Norway, Oct. 18, 1883, Jorgensen came as a lad of sixteen years to U. S. A. He was for many years superintendent of the pattern maker division of the Crane Company. He is survived by his wife, nee Hansine Gronbeck, three sisters, and two brothers, one of whom is Dr. Herman E. Jorgensen, editor of "Lutheraneren" and news editor of Lutheran Herald.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Homme

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Homme, members of the Rock Valle Church, Echo, Minn., lost their lives in an automobile collision which took place Aug. 28 near their home. Funeral services took place Sept. 1, the Rev. A. L. Asper officiating. Other speakers were: the Rev. O. P. Sheggeby, a nephew of the deceased, and the Rev. E. V. Holland, a former pastor of the Rock Valle Church. Mr. Homme was 75 years of age, and Mrs. Homme 74. They were married in 1910.

Mrs. Ole Olsen

Mrs. Bergithe Olsen, a member of St. Paul's Church, Minneapolis, Minn., died Aug. 31, almost 83 years of age. The funeral took place Sept. 2, the Rev. M. G. Halvorson officiating. Born at Lillesand, Norway, Nov. 17, 1870, Mrs. Olsen came to U. S. A. in 1888. In 1890 she married Ole Olsen, founder and superintendent of the Gateway Gospel Mission, Minneapolis; he died in 1939. She is survived by one son and three daughters.

JUST ANOTHER HOME?

No, though it is like many other homes within The Evangelical Lutheran Church.

It is not "just another home," because this one is a home with a purpose. It is a servant of the Church in spreading the message of Christianity.

Being an INFORMED family is an important part of effecting this work. These Lutherans are kept in touch with their fellow Christians throughout the world, and in tune with the policies and work of their church, through its official organ, LUTHERAN HERALD. Local church events and personalities, other Lutheran and Protestant churches in the Christian world, the organizational work of the ELC, the development of missionary and educational programs, as well as the entire picture in debated church issues, are all items of church news covered in LUTHERAN HERALD.

Perhaps your home is like this one. Or, if not, you'd like it to be. So that families may find it easier to subscribe to LUTHERAN HERALD, October has been selected Church Paper Month. During October, LUTHERAN HERALD subscription rates, either new or renewed, will be $2.25 rather than the usual $2.75. Renewing NOW extends your present expiration date one more year. See your pastor, ushers, or special church paper committee this week. Subscriptions are payable in advance.

NORSEMEN FOUND A CHURCH

With an Old Heritage Into a New Land

COMPILED AND EDITED BY DR. J. C. K. PREUS

$4.75 Code 14-398

Here is a fascinating historical account to mark the hundredth anniversary of one of the three synods that make up our present Evangelical Lutheran Church. The founding of The Norwegian Synod, officially called "The Synod for the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America," is being celebrated this October. The story of this synod—its transition from Norway to America, its struggle for a foothold, the accompanying formation of settlements, the spreading of church work into fields of education, music, publications, charities, missions—is written with a warm understanding, making that which is vital from the past come alive for this generation.
